1. At the beginning of February 1954, the barracks installation in Dessau-Rosslau (3401), was still occupied by about 3,500 troops who wore tank insignia and, in some instances, artillery or engineer insignia. Troops engaged in intensive training activity which predominantly included small-arm firing practice. Several tanks were seen driving to the Gross-Kuehnau training area in early February.

2. Between early and mid-February, the units from the barracks installation in Dessau-Rosslau continuously engaged in two-day practices with T-34 tanks and 57-mm AT guns on the drill grounds west of Dessau airfield.

3. Between February and early March, the barracks installation in Dessau-Rosslau was still occupied by about 5,000 troops who wore red-bordered black epaulets with artillery or tank insignia. Exercises with tanks and infantry weapons were conducted in and outside the barracks area. On 18 February, 18 JS-2 tanks and 10 T-34/85 tanks were parked at the installation. The exercises outside the barracks are usually involved 300 to 700 troops.
